Giving an effective presentation — ●ROBIN KLAASSEN — The Netherlands

Chances are that you are a very smart person (hey, you're in physics, obviously). But are all those brains also helping you when standing in front of a room full of people, and you have a way too short amount of time to explain to them what your scientific work is all about? Can your brains keep you from pacing around nervously while mumbling some difficult words with your face towards the slides? Can they make sure your audience even remembers one sentence of it, a week after the presentation?

If the answer to any of these questions is 'no', and you are actually concerned about the number of people openly yawning and playing on their phones during your talk, or if you just want to learn how to structure your talk and your slides, then this workshop is for you. Expect an interactive session with videos, explanations, discussions and short exercises. So muster your courage, step forward and take part in this workshop!
